

Romulo Will Speak Today On Far East

Philippine Official Will Talk on Communism

Carlos P. Romulo, former president of the United Nations General Assembly, will speak on "Communist Aggression in Southeast Asia" today at 4 p.m. in Ferris Booth Hall.

The speech, sponsored by the Citizenship Council, will be his last before leaving his present position as Philippine delegate to the UN. He is returning to his country to become president of the University of the Philippines.

Mr. Romulo was a general in the US Army during World War II. He served as an aide to General McArthur's staff, and received numerous decorations for his services.

After the war Romulo became an outstanding spokesman against the rising Communist influence in Southeast Asia. He was awarded a Pulitzer Prize in 1941 for a series of reports on the possibility of Japanese conquests.

A political power in the Philippines, Romulo was influential in electing President Raymond Mag-saysay to his office.

Romulo gained a reputation during the post-war period for procuring foreign aid and payments for war-time damages from the United States for the Philippines.

Managers Approve Financing Library For Humanities A

The Board of Managers of Ferris Booth Hall has passed a motion to open a charge account in the Columbia Bookstore in the name of Assistant Professor of Russian Robert L. Belknap for the purpose of establishing for the Humanities department, a library of critical works.

The honorarium is a gift to the department in recognition of their outstanding work in preparing the Humanities Lecture Series.

Although the motion for the grant has been unanimously passed, the allocation of the exact amount of money must be approved by John Burke, Assistant Director of King's Crown Activities, who will examine the budget and determine what appropriation is feasible.

College Alumni to Present Knickerbocker Holiday Here

By Arthur J. Grebow

College alumni will return to their Alma Mater in June for five days of sightseeing and visiting with classmates. Living in New Hall, the alumni, their wives, and children will participate in activities both on campus and at Baker Field, in the second annual Knickerbocker Holiday.

The five day reunion, from June 1 to June 5, is sponsored by the Alumni Association of the College, under the direction of Thomas E. Monaghan '31, president, and Frank Safran '58, executive secretary of the Association.

The price for the holiday week, including room, meals and all activities, is fifteen dollars per person per day for double occupancy and twenty dollars for single occupancy.

Arriving on a Friday afternoon, the alumni will be able to attend a buffet supper in Ferris Booth Hall and a production of "Guys and Dolls" or a Glee Club concert.

The activities on Saturday will include an all-sports program at Baker Field, followed by a picnic luncheon and a rugby match.

Two alumni seminars and a buffet luncheon, to which seniors and their families are invited, highlight the June 3 program. Columbia College Class Day will take place on June 4, following which seniors and their families will be the guests of the Alumni Association and the Parents' Committee at a reception and luncheon. In addition to these activities, alumni are invited to the Commencement on June 5.

Grad Council Disturbed By Dorm Priority

Professional Schools Get Residence Preference

Members of the Graduate Faculties Student Council have expressed concern that priority in the projected graduate dormitory will be given to students from the professional schools of Law, Engineering, and Business.

Joseph P. Nye, director of Men's Residence Halls, explained Friday that since these schools promised funds towards construction costs, while Graduate Faculties did not, students from Law, Engineering and Business would receive priority.

But he went on to assure Graduate Faculties students that John Jay Hall, which now houses both graduate and professional students, would give priority to those students low on the list for the new dormitory.

The new building is planned for the East Campus, on Morningside Drive between 117th and 118th Streets. According to Mr. Nye, it will be three or four years before it will be ready for occupation.

If University plans for two new College dormitories materialize, Mr. Nye said, John Jay will continue to serve as a graduate dormitory. If not, new provisions will be sought for students rejected from the 750-unit, all-single room new dormitory.

The concern of Graduate Faculties students arose before fundraising for the new dormitory began. It was conceived as a graduate building with no priority for any schools. At no time, however, was the dormitory planned solely for Graduate Faculties.

Filmmakers of Columbia concludes its first series tonight with a performance of F. W. Murnau's "Sunrise" and Georges Franju's "Blood of the Beasts," in McMillin Theater. "Sunrise," named "the greatest film of all time" by the French periodical Cahiers du Cinema, replaces "Border Street," which was originally scheduled.

Series profits will help finance the group's first major project, "The Saint at the Crossroads," a sound film written and directed by Phillip Lopate '64. Shooting has already begun on the film, which is expected to be screened in the fall. In the cast are Mitchell Hall, Richard Alba, Bill Finley and Hildy Fuss.

Lowe, Goldstein Receive Awards

Two scientists, Donald V. Lowe '11E, and Professor of Nuclear Engineering Science Herbert Goldstein, have been named recipients of Columbia's Egleston Medal and the Atomic Energy's Commission's E. O. Lawrence Memorial Award, respectively.

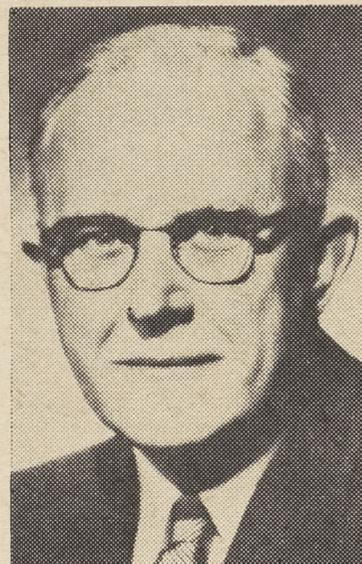

Mr. Lowe, commissioner and former chairman of The Port of New York Authority, received the award for "distinguished engineering achievement."

The announcement of the award was made yesterday by Robert D. Lilley, president of the Columbia Engineering School Alumni Association. The actual presentation will take place on Saturday, April 28, as part of the annual Engineering Dean's Day program.

Mr. Lowe is vice chairman of the Columbia Engineering Council, a member of the Friends of Columbia Libraries, and a member of the Columbia Associates.

The Egleston Medal Award has been made yearly since 1939 in honor of the memory of Thomas Egleston who founded the School of Mines at Columbia in 1864.

Former recipients of the Egleston Medal include Admiral Hyman Rickover, a leader in the development of nuclear submarines; Dr. Irving Langmuir, Nobel Prize winner; and Major Edwin H. Armstrong, inventor of the FM radio.

AWARDS GIVEN: Donald V. Lowe '11E (l.), who received Columbia's Egleston Medal, and Herbert Goldstein, professor of nuclear engineering, who won Atomic Energy Commission's E. O. Lawrence Memorial Award.

Dr. Herbert Goldstein, professor of nuclear engineering, was one of five American scientists named today to receive the Atomic Energy Commission's Ernest Orlando Lawrence Memorial Award for 1962.

The scientists were chosen by an advisory committee to the Commission and their selection was approved by President Kennedy. Each winner will receive a citation, a medal and $5,000.

The award is given annually to not more than five US citizens 45 years of age or under who have made recent meritorious contributions to the development, use or control of atomic energy in all sciences related to atomic energy.

Professor Goldstein came to Columbia in 1961. He was previously associated with the Nuclear Development Corporation of America, where he made significant contributions to reactor physics.

Memorial Services Will Be Conducted For GS Teacher

Memorial services will be held tomorrow at 5 p.m. in St. Paul's Chapel for Joseph Edward Targett, instructor in English at General Studies, who drowned April 5 on a kayak trip. He was 37 years old.

Mr. Targett joined the Columbia faculty in 1960 as an instructor in the Program in American Language Instruction, a series of courses designed to teach English to foreign students.

The service will be attended by a few close friends and colleagues of Mr. Targett. There will be no speeches or eulogy, but some music that Mr. Targett liked during his life will be played.

Way to Peace, which is composed of faculty members. The student organization will not, however, be involved in the policy-making decisions of the faculty group.

The students plan to hold a recruitment drive, and to obtain the endorsement of student religious organizations. Talks have been held with Unitarian student groups, and are planned with Protestant and Jewish groups.

Dr. Amatai Etzioni, associate professor of sociology, founder of the faculty group and an adviser to the student group commented that religious organizations are being contacted because "religions are naturally in the business of peace."

The student council also intends to try to have the National Student Association adopt its program. In addition, the group hopes to persuade the Student Peace Union to utilize their strategy.

Preparation

As Professors Wishy and Dewey have demonstrated in our letters column, there is serious disagreement among faculty members over what constitutes the best preparation for graduate study. Those, like Professor Wishy, who advocate more intensive training in the student's chosen field, are countered by others, like Professor Dewey, who would preserve the traditionally general liberal arts curriculum.

It appears, however, that the College curriculum can accommodate both points of view without damaging either. The new alternative to English A next year is a case in point.

It will be a one-term study of a single major literary work, to be conducted in the detailed manner that is sometimes falsely considered the exclusive province of graduate schools. Open to three sections of advanced freshmen, the course hopefully will provide an insight into an important book, and, more significantly, into the methods of gaining that insight.

Certainly the course is designed to attract and prepare better English majors, and as such it is of great value to the department. But it will not interfere with the general liberal arts curriculum. It will be offered as an alternative to English A, not in addition to it.

The major purpose of freshman English — training good writers — should not be neglected in this special course. Training in literary criticism need not preclude training in lucidity.

Course Evaluation

Action and the Ted Kremer Society soon will distribute a questionnaire that hopefully will lead to the publication of a booklet evaluating Columbia courses.

The enterprise is nothing new; it has been tried before — and failed. But there are reasons to hope that this attempt will succeed. The questionnaire will not simply be left stacked in Hamilton Hall to wait on the pleasure and curiosity of undergraduates. It will be distributed in the dormitories. No one will rely on student initiative to insure that the forms will be filled out and returned. The two organizations will send men to collect them.

Course evaluation booklets are used at Harvard, the University of Pennsylvania and many other schools to supply students with information on courses and teachers. At Columbia, they would be a valuable aid not only to students, but also to the faculty and administration personnel now concerned with curriculum review. It will give more information about courses than the Catalogue, and prevent students from registering for courses they will later regret having taken.

Though these booklets have been used successfully elsewhere, the one to be published at Columbia must be guided only by the needs of this campus. There is no necessity to concentrate on an evaluation of large or introductory courses, or on required offerings. These are either sufficiently well-known and appreciated, or, as in the case of CC B, are being evaluated by a faculty committee. The evaluation should concentrate on the more specialized, less familiar courses within each department, and it should be reviewed from year to year.

Every effort is being made to eliminate inconvenience to students, but members of Action and Ted Kremer cannot fill out the questionnaires themselves. It would be worthwhile for College students to exert themselves a bit and submit the form. The course evaluation booklet may save them more exertion later.

Springtime on the Quad

LOVERS' QUARREL

In the Provinces

By Joseph T. Lambert

The lovers' quarrel between the Daily Pennsylvanian and the coed Pennsylvania News may be over.

During the recent suspension of the Pennsylvanian, which was imposed following a parody issue of the News, the sister newspaper published three issues and incurred a $1000 deficit. Now the Dean of Women's office at the University of Pennsylvania has refused to allow the News to print any more issues this year.

The Pennsylvanian, having felt the sting of administrative curtailment of their freedom, has gallantly defended the News. A recent editorial said, "The administration's lack of concern with the fate of the Pennsylvania News represents either a deplorable indifference toward student activities or a conscious strategem to control the undergraduate press through the pocket veto."

But Dean of Women Constance P. Dent has remained adamant. "The additional expense should have been considered when the decision to print the extra issues was made," the Dean commented.

Had the News and Pennsylvanian kissed and made up a long time ago, they would have saved themselves a lot of trouble.

The Penn campus has a long-standing tradition which goes by the name "robottom."

A "robottom" for the uninitiate is roughly equivalent to the occasional spring sprints across Broadway by panty-hunting Lions. It is, however, in an entirely different class.

Several years ago a robottom occurred which resulted in the arrest of 138 students.

Symptomatic of the difference is this statement from the Pennsylvanian: "Students today are confident that they may rely on police generosity and, at most, will be arrested, jailed for the night, reprimanded and released."

Nevertheless, a "baby robottom," which took place last week, only found one student in police custody.

Hofstadter Will Participate In Conference at Princeton

Richard Hofstadter, De Witt Clinton Professor of American History, will participate this fall in the American Civilization Conference at Princeton University. The conference, being held this spring and next fall, is on American industrial Culture, 1865-1915.

While at Princeton, the Columbia professor will give three public lectures. He will commute to Princeton once a week for the conference while he retains his teaching responsibilities at Columbia.

Professor Hofstadter, who teaches a six point research seminar in the College, was awarded a Pulitzer Prize in 1955 for his book, "The Age of Reform." He has written a new book on anti-intellectualism in American history which will be published next winter.

Professor Hofstadter's three public lectures will be on the theme of his new book. He will

Sigma Nu National Grants Michigan Unit Bias Waiver

The High Council of Sigma Nu National fraternity has granted the University of Michigan chapter a waiver from Sigma's Nu's constitution which says that "members must be men, free born of free ancestry, and without Negro blood and have the character and bearing of gentlemen."

This waiver will probably eliminate the possibility of any punitive action by Michigan's Student Government Council against the fraternity, for violating a Regents by-law forbidding discrimination.

Stewart Loud, head of the Michigan chapter, expressed "surprise and delight" at the High Council's move. The National Executive Secretary of Sigma Nu, Richard R. Fletcher, said there are absolutely "no strings attached" to the waiver.

Loud said that the waiver also eliminates a "more recent by-law which excludes Chinese, Japanese and others of Oriental descent." It finally eliminates all discriminatory phrases in the fraternity's initiation ritual. Loud explained that the Michigan chapter was the only one to get the waiver without specifically indicating a date when discrimination would be ended.

Evans Is Named To Library Post

The Trustees of Columbia University have named Luther H. Evans Director of International and Legal Collections at the University.

Dr. Evans was Librarian of Congress from 1945 to 1953, and director general of UNESCO from 1953 to 1958. He will assume his new post July 1.

The new director was born in Sayersville, Texas in 1902. He received bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of Texas and a Ph.D. from Stanford University.

Dr. Evans is the author of "The Virgin Islands, From Naval Base to New Deal" (1945).

Columbia Downs Colgate, 8-1, As Kaplan Hurls Three-Hitter

Rain Doesn't Stop Bohaboy, Vasell

By Andrew B. Schultz

The Light Blue nine walloped Colgate 8-1 Friday afternoon on a day that was more suited for meteorologists than for ball-players.

A stellar three-hit pitching performance by Bob Kaplan and solid home run shots by Doug Bohaboy and Tom Vasell guided Columbia to victory in the abbreviated seven inning game, called on account of rain.

Before the umpire mercifully ended proceedings, the thinning ranks of spectators had been treated to a rain-soaked afternoon at Baker Field — marked by two pauses when the rains came down.

The visiting Red Raiders did very little raiding. Their hitting was light and their fielding efforts were marred by the muddy turf. But the Lions seemed not a bit bothered by the elements.

They jumped off to a two-run lead in the first inning. Mike Oliphant singled sharply through the middle. Left fielder John Ognibene walked on a 3-2 pitch. After John O'Brien's sacrifice pushed the runners up a base, both scored on a single to short center by Bohaboy. The Lion first baseman advanced on a wild pickoff throw to first by Colgate hurler Malcolm Lynch. The ball wound up in the underbrush behind first. Bohaboy scooted to third.

The inning ended as Tom Vasell sent a rocket-like liner right at third baseman Wade Staniar. The bespectacled little Colgate infielder stood his ground and speared the drive, to the surprise of some wags on the sidelines, who thought it would knock him down.

With two out in the top of the second frame, a light drizzle suddenly became a downpour. The bewildered umpire called a temporary halt. The crowd scurried to the covered area underneath the football stands. They impatiently watched the Hudson River Day Line pass by, its horn loudly blowing. Following a six-minute interruption, the game resumed.

In the fourth inning, Colgate scored its only run of the afternoon. With one out, Ted Cushmore walked and scored all the way from first base on a double up the left center field alley by Bruce Toelle. Kaplan then settled down and retired the side as two Red Raiders flied out.

Midway through the inning, the umpire was once again forced to stop the game. Sixteen minutes later, a determined bunch of fans returned to the thoroughly soaked seats and action started once again. The torrents became a drizzle and the sun shone weakly through an ominously cloudy sky.

The delay apparently did not improve the delivery of Lynch, the Colgate southpaw.

Back to back circuit clouts followed on succeeding pitches, in Columbia's half of the fourth. Bohaboy began the barrage with a straightaway center field blast that cleared the fence about three-hundred thirty feet from the plate. Teammate Tom Vasell sent a sphere into Spuyten Duyvil on Lynch's next offering.

In the sixth, the Lions loaded the bases on a single by Bohaboy and two walks, with nobody out. One run scored on a fielder's choice play when a hustling John O'Brien managed to beat a throw home. Catcher Steve Russo substituting for John Roche, then came through with a clean single to center, driving in two men. When Colgate's Jim Heilman bobbled the ball, a third Lion scored. Russo, trying to reach third base on the error, was a little too ambitious. He was thrown out by at least thirty feet.

When the Red Raiders went down in order in the seventh, and more rain began to fall, the umpire made his last decision of the afternoon — to end the affair.

Early Scientific Instruments Exhibited In Butler Library

A collection of early scientific instruments is presently on display on the third floor of Butler Library.

The exhibit, which consists primarily of astronomical and mathematical devices, is part of a collection accumulated by David Eugene Smith, a former professor of mathematics at Columbia. A large number of surveying instruments, measuring and calculating devices, drawing instruments, number games, and miscellaneous related materials are on display.

These articles have been supplemented by manuscripts and books that have been drawn from branches of the library.

The instruments have been collected from all over the world and include such things as ancient Roman dice, early Greek geometrical tools, and some predecessors of modern slide rules and calculating machines.

This is the first time in many years that the Smith exhibit has been shown and it will continue until July 1.

Big Red Gridders For Spring Practice In Daily Sun Poll

In a poll conducted by the Cornell Daily Sun, forty of 48 football players from the two most recent Big Red teams said that they favored spring football practice.

The Ivy League is the only major college football conference which doesn't allow spring practice. The 1954 President's Agreement, which formally established the Ivy League, specifically stated that no spring football practice was to be held despite the outcries of players, coaches and fans.

The Sun poll indicated that the players didn't feel that football and good grades were mutually exclusive. In fact, many players stated that their grades actually improved during the season.

A similar poll by the Yale Daily News showed that 55 of the 62 players on the 1960 team favored the return to spring practice.
